Shut up! ... I'm trying to think. These are famous words by the much-loved British detective Sherlock Holmes. But why is he so popular (...)? Well, let's think about that for a little while. Sherlock Holmes isn't actually a real person. He is a character from books like The Hound of the Baskervilles by the Scottish author Arthur Conan Doyle who lived in the 19th and 20th centuries.

Holmes lives in London at 221b Baker Street. He usually wears a tweed suit, a hat, smokes his pipe and walks around with his spyglass. He is really intelligent; (...). And he is different from other people: for example, he never wants much money (...) and he likes to be in his room playing the violin or thinking for hours. Sometimes he goes to a chemical laboratory or for long walks. And he is a bit untidy.

Really important for Sherlock is his friend Dr Watson. The two Londoners have known each other for a long time and so Watson is one of the few people who truly understands and accepts Holmes. Watson, (...), helps Holmes with his crime-fighting adventures. Later, he writes their stories down so people can read them in the newspaper.

Sherlock is still the most famous detective because he looks so very British, he is intelligent and does a great job as a detective. And he is also a little bit like us. But most importantly, here we have two people who work together (...). Who is your Dr Watson?

1. and his dog on the lead
2. to make the world a little better

6. who works as a doctor
